"A crocodile for his sweetheart"

English translation of Polish book by Jacek Pulikowski

The title "A Crocodile for His Sweetheart", is symbolic of what a man in love is capable of doing for his chosen one. It takes a great deal of effort for both the man and woman to build a strong and loving family. This time the author is directing his message to women, especially young women, so that they can help their men grow. With their feminine charm and sensitivity to beauty and good they can help their guys become men so that they may reach the fullest potential of their masculine dignity.

The „crocodile” in the book’s title is a reference to a well-known comedy by Aleksander Fredro, The Revenge (1834). Papkin is courting Klara, who demands a proof of bravery by asking him to bring her a crocodile (hoping this will put him off).

If you don't want to see my plight

Bring me a crocodile

– says Papkin to himself, complaining about the kind of demands that girls of the day make to test their suitors’ determination (there was a time when a canary would have sufficed).
